1,102 SEX OFFENDER ARRESTS BY U.S. MARSHALS' "OPERATION FALCON II" ANNOUNCED BY ATTORNEY GENERAL

WASHINGTON, DC – Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales and U.S. Marshals Service Director John F. Clark announced that a seven-day fugitive roundup conducted by Deputy Marshals and hundreds of partners from state, local and other federal agencies led to the arrests of 9,037 individuals. Among those arrested during Operation FALCON II were 1,102 violent sexual offenders, the largest number ever captured in a single law enforcement effort. Operation FALCON II was conducted from April 17 through April 23.

FALCON II (Federal and Local Cops Organized Nationally) was conducted in 27 states mostly west of the Mississippi River, and the territories of Guam and Northern Mariana Islands. High-priority targets for arrest were fugitives wanted for committing sexual offenses and crimes of violence against women, children and the elderly, as well as unregistered convicted sex offenders. Convicted sex offenders often move from the locations where they committed the crimes, yet fail to notify local law enforcement of their whereabouts as required by law. Other priority targets were fugitive gang members and violent offenders wanted for homicide, kidnapping, robbery, burglary, carjacking, weapons offenses, and major narcotics distribution.

“Last year’s Operation FALCON I was the largest, most successful fugitive apprehension effort in the nation’s history,” said Attorney General Gonzales, “I told the Marshals Service that I looked forward to additional FALCON operations, and they didn’t let me down.”

William Wisham is a textbook case of what can go wrong when a community is not aware that a convicted sexual predator is in its midst. His career of Crimes Against Children and Lewd and Lascivious Acts stretches back to 1979. Most recently, he had failed to register as a sex offender when he moved to a motel in Victorville, California. On April 21, investigators assigned to Operation FALCON encountered Wisham at the motel during the unrelated arrest of two individuals wanted for Child Endangerment. The investigators learned Wisham had violated his requirement to register as a sex offender. Furthermore, he possessed letters to children, notes explaining why he enjoys sex with children, child pornography, candy and methamphetamine. Authorities are working to find and evaluate children listed in Wisham’s diary-style notes. Initial investigations indicated Wisham, using candy as a lure, violated at least one other minor child.

“During each day of FALCON II we put more than 2,100 law enforcement officers on the street to arrest individuals like Wisham,” said Director Clark. “The only way to achieve huge arrest statistics like these is with the full and enthusiastic cooperation of agencies at every level of government. We worked together as partners. This approach,” he said, “creates a force multiplier effect.” The Marshals coordinated officers from 120 state agencies, 330 county agencies, 312 police departments, 6 foreign law enforcement agencies, and 24 other federal agencies. “I’m deeply grateful for their efforts,” said Director Clark.

Operation FALCON II coincided with the Department of Justice’s National Crime Victims’ Rights Week. “We honor these victims and we make our communities safer every time a violent sexual predator is taken off the streets to face justice,” said Attorney General Gonzales. Director Clark noted that “FALCON II does justice to the 2006 theme of National Crime Victims’ Rights Week, ‘Strength in Unity.’”

In one of the first arrests during FALCON II, Herbert Damwijk was arrested in Hauula, Oahu, Hawaii. He was wanted for two counts each of Child Rape and Child Molestation against eight-year-old girls. Authorities in his home state of Washington contacted FALCON II investigators in Seattle for help in finding and capturing Damwijk. Their investigators developed leads that traced Damwijk into Oregon, and later to Hawaii. On April 17, FALCON II investigators in Hawaii arrested Damwijk at his father’s residence. He currently awaits extradition back to Snohomish County, Washington.

“Thankfully, none of the officers involved in apprehending these dangerous fugitives were seriously injured,” said Robert J. Finan II, the Marshals’ Assistant Director for Investigations. There also were no serious injuries to those taken into custody. Finan praised two federal participants that focused talent and resources on FALCON II. “Maximum efforts relating to drug and weapons seizures and gang violence came from our partners in the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives. We thank them for their continuing support,” he said. Assistant Director Finan further recognized the efforts of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, which worked closely with USMS to identify high-priority cases in which convicted sex offenders had failed to register as prescribed by law.

Other federal agents who participated came from the Offices of Inspector General of the Social Security Administration, Department of Veterans Affairs, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Agriculture. Thanks to the efforts of USMS personnel overseas, fugitives who had fled the jurisdiction of the U.S. were targeted by Deputy Marshals and Special Agents of the State Department’s Diplomatic Security Service. Seven arrests were made abroad, and three foreign fugitives arrested in the U.S. will be returned to Mexico.
